CDC Shortens Its COVID-19 Quarantine Recommendations

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has revised its guidelines for people who may have been exposed to the coronavirus. Now, instead of the standard 14-day quarantine it has been recommending, the CDC says that potential exposure warrants a quarantine of ten or seven days, depending on one's test results and symptoms.

If individuals do not develop symptoms, they need only quarantine for 10 days; if they test negative, that period can be reduced to seven days.

The revision marks a significant change from the CDC's recommendations since the start of the pandemic earlier this year. While the agency says a 14-day quarantine remains the safest option, it acknowledged this length placed difficult demands on people.

Change to Maintenance Work

Out of an abundance of caution due to the rise in cases Bath Housing has increased some areas of COVID-19 precautions. For the safety of all residents and staff urgent and emergency work orders only will be completed by the maintenance team. Residents are encouraged to still call in all other work orders so that they are listed and will be addressed when precautions are again relaxed. If you have any questions please contact Housing Associate Sarah Rockwell by calling 295-3506 or email to srockwell@bathhousing.org.
